How to Upsell Training Clients on Meal Plans and Attract Nutrition-Only Clients

Who This Is For

You're a personal trainer who wants to add nutrition services to your business. Maybe you've been training clients for a while and they keep asking "what should I eat?" Maybe you're new and want to offer the full package from day one. Either way, you know that training alone only solves half the equation.

This playbook gives you a complete system for getting your first 10 meal plan clients — both by upselling your existing training clients and by attracting people who want nutrition guidance without personal training. It covers the revenue math, positioning, sales conversations, and a 30-day action plan you can start today.

If you already have training clients, start with Section 3. If you're building from scratch, start at the top.

Section 1: Why Add Nutrition Services

The Revenue Math That Changes Everything

Most trainers earn exclusively from session fees. The problem: session fees are capped by your available hours. You can only train so many people per day. Nutrition services break that ceiling because meal plan delivery is not time-bound the same way a training session is.

Let's run the numbers.

Training-only model:

- ☐ 20 clients at 2 sessions/week = 40 sessions/week
- ☐ Average session rate: $80
- ☐ Monthly revenue: 40 sessions x 4.3 weeks x $80 = $13,760/month
- ☐ Time required: 40 hours of sessions + 10 hours of programming and admin = 50 hours/week

Training + nutrition model:

- ☐ 20 clients at 2 sessions/week + meal plans for 15 of them = same 40 sessions + 15 meal plans
- ☐ Average session rate: $80
- ☐ Meal plan add-on: $75/month per client
- ☐ Monthly revenue: $13,760 (training) + $1,125 (nutrition) = $14,885/month
- ☐ Additional time: 3-5 hours/week using EvoFit Meals to generate and customize plans

That's $1,125/month in additional revenue for roughly 4 extra hours of work per week. That's $281/hour for the nutrition work — significantly higher than your per-session training rate.

Now extend the model. Add 10 nutrition-only clients who don't train with you:

Nutrition-only clients:

- ☐ 10 clients at $150/month (meal plan + monthly check-in) = $1,500/month
- ☐ Additional time: 5-7 hours/week

Combined total: $13,760 + $1,125 + $1,500 = $16,385/month

You've added $2,625/month with roughly 10 extra hours of work per week. And here's the kicker: those nutrition-only clients often convert to full training clients within 3-6 months once they see results and want to level up.

The Compound Effect

Nutrition services create three revenue layers:

- ☐ 1. Upsell revenue — existing training clients adding meal plans
- ☐ 2. Standalone revenue — nutrition-only clients
- ☐ 3. Conversion revenue — nutrition clients upgrading to training

Each layer feeds the others. Training clients who add nutrition get better results and stay longer (retention

Section 2: Positioning Your Nutrition Offering

Choose Your Lane

Before you sell anything, decide what kind of nutrition service you're offering. There are four common models:

Model 1: Meal Plan Delivery (Simplest)

You create customized meal plans tailored to the client's goals, preferences, and restrictions. They receive a weekly or bi-weekly plan with recipes, macros, and a shopping list. No ongoing coaching — just the plan.

- ☐ Best for: Trainers who want to add revenue with minimal time investment
- ☐ Pricing range: $50-100/month
- ☐ Time per client: 30-45 minutes/month after initial setup
- ☐ EvoFit Meals makes this model extremely efficient — you can generate a complete plan in minutes and customize from there

Model 2: Meal Plans + Monthly Check-In

Same as Model 1, but you add a 30-minute monthly nutrition check-in (video call or in-person). You review adherence, adjust the plan based on progress, and troubleshoot barriers.

- ☐ Best for: Trainers who want deeper client relationships and higher pricing
- ☐ Pricing range: $100-200/month
- ☐ Time per client: 60-90 minutes/month
- ☐ Higher retention because clients feel supported

Model 3: Full Nutrition Coaching

Weekly or bi-weekly coaching touchpoints, meal plans, food diary review, habit tracking, and accountability messaging. This is a comprehensive nutrition coaching program.

- ☐ Best for: Trainers with nutrition certifications who want to build a coaching practice
- ☐ Pricing range: $200-400/month
- ☐ Time per client: 2-3 hours/month
- ☐ Requires stronger nutrition knowledge and communication skills

Model 4: Training + Nutrition Bundle (Highest Value)

Your training sessions include integrated nutrition guidance. Clients get both their workout program and their meal plan from you, with everything coordinated.

- ☐ Best for: Trainers who want to maximize per-client revenue
- ☐ Pricing range: Training rate + $75-150/month nutrition add-on
- ☐ This is the model most clients actually want — they just need you to offer it

Recommendation for Professional tier: Start with Model 2 or Model 3. At this level, you

Section 3: The Training-to-Nutrition Upsell

Why Your Existing Clients Are Your Best First Customers

You already have trust. You already have context on their goals, their schedule, and their struggles. And you almost certainly have clients who are training hard but not eating to support their goals.

The upsell conversation is the fastest path to your first nutrition clients.

The Natural Transition

Don't create a separate sales event. Integrate the nutrition conversation into your existing coaching.

Trigger moments — when to bring it up:

- ☐ 1. When they plateau. "You've been crushing the training side. I think the next unlock for you is dialling in your nutrition. Can I show you what I mean?"
- ☐ 2. When they ask about food. This happens constantly. Instead of giving a casual answer, upgrade the conversation: "Actually, I've started offering customized meal plans for my training clients. Want me to walk you through what that looks like?"
- ☐ 3. When they hit a milestone. "You've made incredible progress. If you want to accelerate from here, the biggest lever we haven't pulled is nutrition. I can build you a plan that matches exactly what we're doing in training."
- ☐ 4. During a check-in or progress review. "Looking at your numbers, your training consistency is excellent. The gap between where you are and where you want to be is almost entirely nutrition. Here's what I'd recommend."
- ☐ 5. When they complain about food. "I don't know what to eat." "I just grab whatever's fast." "I'm so inconsistent with meals." These are buying signals. Respond with a solution, not just advice.

The Upsell Script

Here's a conversation you can have during or after a training session. Adapt it to your natural speaking style.

The Setup (1 minute):

> YOU
>
> "Hey [Name], I want to talk to you about something I've been thinking about. You've been doing great in our sessions — your [specific metric] has improved significantly. But I think we're leaving results on the table because we haven't addressed the nutrition side. Can I share something with you?"

The Problem (2 minutes):

> YOU
>
> "Right now, you're training [X] times a week and putting in serious effort. But your body can only adapt if it has the right fuel. Think of it this way: if training is the signal telling your body to change, nutrition is the raw material your body needs to actually make that change. Without the nutrition piece, you're sending the signal but not giving your body what it needs to respond."

The Solution (2 minutes):

> YOU

Section 4: Attracting Nutrition-Only Clients

A Different Audience, A Different Approach

Nutrition-only clients are people who want meal planning and nutrition guidance but don't necessarily want personal training. They might be:

- ☐ People who already exercise on their own (home workouts, running, CrossFit, yoga) but don't know how to eat for their goals
- ☐ People who can't afford personal training but can afford a meal plan service
- ☐ People in a different geographic location (online nutrition has no physical boundary)
- ☐ People who've been referred by a training client's friend
- ☐ Busy professionals who want someone else to figure out what to eat

This audience is larger than the personal training market, and they're underserved. Most nutrition coaching is either very clinical (registered dietitian) or very generic (app-based). There's a massive gap for trainers who understand fitness and can provide practical, goal-oriented meal plans.

Where to Find Nutrition-Only Clients

Channel 1: Referrals from Training Clients

Your training clients know people who need nutrition help. Ask specifically:

> YOU
>
> "Hey [Name], I've started offering nutrition-only services — meal plans and monthly check-ins for people who aren't training with me but want help with their eating. Do you know anyone who's been struggling with that? I'm looking for 5 people to work with this month."

Make it easy: draft a text they can forward.

Channel 2: Social Media — Education-First Content

Nutrition content performs exceptionally well on social media because everyone eats and everyone has food questions. Post content that demonstrates your expertise:

- ☐ "What I'd eat if I wanted to lose 10kg" — a day-of-eating post with macros and reasoning
- ☐ "Meal prep Sunday" — show a real meal prep with portions and nutritional breakdown
- ☐ "3 meals that look complicated but take 15 minutes" — recipe posts with photos
- ☐ "The most common nutrition mistake I see in my clients" — education posts that position you as an expert
- ☐ "Macro myth-busting" — short posts correcting common misconceptions

End every post with a call to action: "I build customized meal plans for people who want to stop guessing. DM me 'PLAN' if you want to see what a week would look like for your goals."

Channel 3: Local Business Partnerships

Partner with businesses whose customers overlap with your target market:

Section 5: Your First 10 Clients Action Plan

Week 1: Foundation

Day 1-2: Set Up Your Offering

- [ ] Choose your nutrition service model (refer to Section 2)
- [ ] Set your pricing (refer to the Meal Plan Pricing & Packaging Guide)
- [ ] Name your service
- [ ] Set up your EvoFit Meals account and practice creating 2-3 sample plans
- [ ] Prepare your dietary questionnaire (see Nutrition Client Onboarding Pack)

Day 3-4: Prepare Your Materials

- [ ] Write your group email announcement (adapt the template from Section 3)
- [ ] Create your social media content plan for the next 30 days (3 posts per week)
- [ ] Draft your referral request message
- [ ] Build 2 sample meal plans you can show prospects

Day 5-7: Launch to Existing Clients

- [ ] Send the group announcement to all training clients
- [ ] Have individual upsell conversations with your top 5 training clients (the ones most likely to say yes)
- [ ] Post your first nutrition-related social media content
- [ ] Ask 3 training clients for referrals

Week 2: Outreach

Day 8-10: Follow Up and Expand

- [ ] Follow up with training clients who opened your email but didn't respond
- [ ] Send the referral request to all remaining training clients
- [ ] Contact 3 local businesses about partnership referrals
- [ ] Post 3 more pieces of nutrition content on social media

Day 11-14: Convert Leads

- [ ] Run nutrition consultations with anyone who expressed interest
- [ ] Build and deliver your first meal plans through EvoFit Meals
- [ ] Follow up with all consultation no-shows and "let me think about it" responses
- [ ] Request testimonials from any clients who started their plans

Week 3: Accelerate

Section 6: Objection Handling

The 7 Most Common Objections and How to Respond

Objection 1: "I can find meal plans for free online."

> YOU
> "You absolutely can — and most of my clients tried that before coming to me. The difference is that a generic plan doesn't account for your specific goals, your food preferences, your schedule, or how your nutrition needs to sync with your training. What I build is customized to you and adjusted based on your progress. Free plans give you information. What I offer is implementation."

Objection 2: "I already know what to eat, I just don't do it."

> YOU
> "That's actually the most common thing I hear. And it tells me the issue isn't knowledge — it's structure and accountability. That's exactly what a customized plan provides. When someone hands you a specific plan with specific meals, portions, and a shopping list, the decision fatigue disappears. You don't have to figure out what to eat — it's already figured out. Most clients tell me that's the biggest shift."

Objection 3: "I don't want to eat boring/restrictive food."

> YOU
> "Neither do I — and that's not what this is. Your plan will be built around foods you actually enjoy. I'll ask you about your preferences, your dislikes, and any restrictions before I build anything. If you hate broccoli, broccoli won't be in your plan. The whole point is to create something you'll actually follow."

Objection 4: "That's expensive on top of training."

> YOU
> "I understand. Here's how I think about it: you're investing [X] per month in training. If your nutrition isn't supporting that training, you're getting 50-60% of the results you could be getting. The meal plan add-on closes that gap. It's not an additional cost — it's the thing that makes your training investment actually pay off."

Objection 5: "I'll just do it myself."

> YOU
> "I respect that. If you want, I can give you some general guidelines to start with. But here's what I've seen: building a proper meal plan that accounts for your macros, your training schedule, your food preferences, and your calorie targets takes real time and expertise. Most people who try to do it themselves spend hours, get frustrated, and end up back at square one. The value of what I offer isn't just the plan — it's the hours you don't spend trying to figure it out yourself."

Objection 6: "I need to think about it."

> YOU
> "Of course. Can I ask — what's the main thing you want to think through? Is it the cost, the time

Section 7: Metrics That Matter

Track These Numbers Monthly

MetricHow to TrackTarget Nutrition conversations this monthTally in your pipeline tracker10+ Conversion rate (conversation to client)Clients won / total conversations40%+ Upsell rate (training clients adding nutrition)Nutrition add-ons / total training clients50%+ Average nutrition revenue per clientTotal nutrition revenue / nutrition clients$100+/month Client retention (month-over-month)Clients retained / clients at start of month85%+ Referrals from nutrition clientsCount of new leads from existing clients2+/month

The Health Check

Run this check on the 1st of every month:

- ☐ 1. How many nutrition clients do I have? ____
- ☐ 2. How much revenue did nutrition generate this month? $____
- ☐ 3. How many hours did I spend on nutrition work this month? ____
- ☐ 4. What's my effective hourly rate for nutrition? $____ (revenue / hours)
- ☐ 5. How many clients did I lose this month? ____
- ☐ 6. How many new nutrition clients did I gain? ____
- ☐ 7. What was my top client source this month? ____

If your effective hourly rate for nutrition work is below your training rate, you need to either raise prices, improve efficiency (EvoFit Meals helps significantly here), or reduce the time you spend per client.

Section 8: The Referral Engine Blueprint

Why Referrals Are Your Best Client Source

Every acquisition channel has a cost. Social media costs time. Paid ads cost money. Workshops cost both. Referrals cost almost nothing — and they convert at 2-3x the rate of cold leads because they arrive with built-in trust.

A referred lead has already heard about you from someone they trust. They already have context on what you do. They've already decided you might be worth talking to. Your only job is to confirm what their friend already told them.

The problem: most trainers treat referrals as something that happens to them rather than something they engineer. They wait for clients to spontaneously recommend them instead of building a system that generates referrals consistently.

The Referral System

Step 1: Identify Your Referral Moments

Not all moments are equal for asking for referrals. The best time to ask is when the client is experiencing a peak of positive emotion about your service. These moments include:

- ☐ Immediately after you deliver positive progress data ("You lost 4 lbs this month and your protein consistency is at 90%")
- ☐ After a client says something like "I actually enjoy eating now" or "My partner noticed the change"
- ☐ After you solve a problem for them (swapped meals they hated, adjusted for travel, navigated a holiday)
- ☐ At the end of a successful first month
- ☐ At the 90-day summary

Step 2: The Ask Templates The Direct Ask (for clients with strong results):

> YOU
> "[Name], your results have been incredible — [specific result]. I'm looking to take on 2-3 new nutrition clients this month. Do you know anyone — a friend, colleague, gym buddy — who's been struggling with their eating or wanting to get healthier? I'd love to help someone you trust."

The Partner Ask (for clients in relationships):

> YOU
> "Has [partner's name] noticed the changes in your eating? Sometimes when one person in a household starts eating better, the other gets curious. If they're interested, I can build them a plan too — and it actually makes it easier for both of you when the fridge is stocked for the same goals."

The Workplace Ask (for clients with office connections):

> YOU
> "Do any of your colleagues ever talk about food, diets, or wanting to get in shape? Corporate wellness is a big part of what I do, and I'd love an introduction. Even a casual mention — 'my nutrition coach could help you' — goes a long way."

Section 9: Nutrition-Specific Lead Magnet Templates

What's a Lead Magnet?

A lead magnet is a free resource you give away in exchange for a prospect's email address (or DM conversation). It positions you as an expert, gives the prospect a taste of your value, and creates a natural bridge to your paid service.

For nutrition coaches, the best lead magnets are practical, specific, and immediately usable. Nobody wants a 40-page ebook. They want something they can use today.

Template 1: The 5-Day Meal Plan Sample

Title: "5 Days of Meals Under 2,000 Calories — No Boring Food, No Complicated Prep" What it includes:

- ☐ 5 days of breakfast, lunch, dinner, and 1 snack
- ☐ Full macro breakdown per meal
- ☐ Grocery list for all 5 days
- ☐ Estimated prep time per meal (all under 25 minutes)
- ☐ 1-page "How to Read Your Macros" cheat sheet

How to build it: Create a 5-day plan in EvoFit Meals for your target niche. Export or screenshot the plan. Format it as a clean PDF with your branding. Call to action at the end: "This is a sample of what I build for my clients every week — but customized to your specific goals, preferences, and schedule. Want your own? Book a free 15-minute nutrition consultation: [link]." Where to promote it:

- ☐ Instagram bio link
- ☐ Facebook group pinned post
- ☐ End of every nutrition content post
- ☐ Email signature
- ☐ Local gym bulletin board (with a QR code)

Template 2: The Macro Calculator + Starter Guide

Title: "Calculate Your Macros in 5 Minutes — Plus a Starter Guide to Actually Hitting Them" What it includes:

- ☐ Simple macro calculation formula (body weight x multiplier based on goal)
- ☐ Table of multipliers for fat loss, maintenance, and muscle gain
- ☐ Example day of eating at each goal
- ☐ 10 high-protein meal ideas that take under 15 minutes
- ☐ 1-page meal prep starter checklist

Section 10: DM Scripts for Nutrition Leads

The Art of the Nutrition DM

DM conversations are your highest-converting sales channel — if you do them right. The rules: never lead with a pitch. Always lead with curiosity. The goal of the first message is to start a conversation, not close a sale.

Script 1: Responding to a Lead Magnet Download

> YOU
> "Hey [Name], thanks for grabbing the [lead magnet name]. Quick question — what's your biggest nutrition goal right now? Curious so I can point you to the most helpful part of the guide."

Wait for their response. Then:

> YOU
> "Nice — [acknowledge their goal]. That's actually one of the most common goals I work on with my clients. Are you currently following any kind of plan, or are you more in the 'figuring it out as I go' phase?"

They'll usually admit they're winging it. Then:

> YOU
> "Totally get it. That's where most people start. If you're interested, I can show you what a customized week of eating would look like for your goals — no obligation, just a sample so you can see the difference between winging it and having a system. Want me to put something together?"

Script 2: Cold DM to Someone Who Engaged With Your Content

> YOU
> "Hey [Name], I noticed you liked/commented on my post about [topic]. Appreciate the engagement! Out of curiosity, is [topic] something you're actively working on right now?"

If they say yes:

> YOU
> "Awesome. What's been the hardest part? I work with a lot of people on [topic] and I'm always curious what the real-world struggle is."

Listen, empathize, then bridge:

> YOU
> "That's a really common bottleneck. I actually build custom meal plans that solve exactly that — [specific solution to their stated problem]. Would you be open to a quick 10-minute chat where I can show you what that looks like in practice?"

Script 3: Referral Introduction

Section 11: Content Marketing Calendar for Nutrition

The 30-Day Content Engine

Content Creation Efficiency Tips

- [ ] Batch create: spend 2 hours on Sunday creating all posts for the week
- [ ] Repurpose: turn one client win into a post, a story, and a reel
- [ ] Screenshot EvoFit Meals: the dashboard and meal plans are visually rich — use them as content
- [ ] Track engagement: note which post types get the most saves, shares, and DMs — those are your winners

Section 12: Recipe Content Strategy Guide

Why Recipe Content Is Your Most Powerful Marketing Tool

Recipe posts consistently outperform every other type of fitness content on social media. They get saved (people want to try them later), they get shared (people tag friends), and they position you as someone who makes healthy eating look achievable and delicious — not restrictive and boring.

The key: your recipe content should look like something from a food blog, not a bodybuilding forum. No plain chicken breast in a container. No undressed salads. Real food that real people want to eat.

The Recipe Content Formula

Every recipe post should include:

- ☐ 1. An appetizing photo — natural lighting, clean background, actual plate (not a meal prep container)
- ☐ 2. The recipe name — make it sound good: "Honey Garlic Chicken with Coconut Rice" not "High Protein Chicken Recipe #7"
- ☐ 3. Macro breakdown — calories, protein, carbs, fats per serving
- ☐ 4. Time and difficulty — "20 min Easy" or "35 min Intermediate"
- ☐ 5. A hook — one sentence that sells the recipe: "This tastes like takeout but has 45g of protein and took me 15 minutes."
- ☐ 6. The CTA — "Save this for later" or "DM me PLAN for a full week of meals like this"

Content Series Ideas

"What I'd Eat" Series:

- ☐ "What I'd eat if I wanted to lose fat without feeling hungry"
- ☐ "What I'd eat if I trained in the morning"
- ☐ "What I'd eat on a $50/week grocery budget"
- ☐ "What I'd eat to build muscle without spending hours cooking"

Each post shows a full day of eating with macros and photos. These perform exceptionally well because they're actionable and specific.

"One Recipe, Three Ways" Series:

Take a single base ingredient (chicken thighs, ground turkey, salmon) and show three completely different meals using it. This demonstrates versatility and reduces the "boring food" perception.

"Macro Makeover" Series:

Take a common unhealthy meal (fast food burger, takeout pizza, sugary breakfast) and show a homemade version that hits better macros while tasting great. Side-by-side comparison photos work well here.

"Client Favorites" Series:

Share recipes that your actual nutrition clients love — with their permission or anonymized. "This is the meal my client said finally made her stop craving takeout." Real social proof embedded in recipe content.

Recipe Content to Client Pipeline

Quick Reference: The Revenue Ladder

Here's what your nutrition revenue looks like as you grow:

ClientsModelMonthly RevenueAnnual Revenue 5Meal plan only ($75/mo)$375$4,500 10Meal plan + check-in ($125/mo)$1,250$15,000 15Mix of models ($125 avg)$1,875$22,500 20Mix of models ($150 avg)$3,000$36,000 30Mix of models ($150 avg)$4,500$54,000

At 20 clients averaging $150/month, nutrition alone adds $36,000/year to your income. That's a full salary for many people — built on top of your training business.

The path from 0 to 20 nutrition clients takes most trainers 3-6 months of consistent effort. The system in this playbook is designed to get you there.
